Care Transitions: Clinical and Financial Advantage to Home Health

March 19, 2015

Chronic Care Management in Home Health

March 26, 2015

About this conference:

Home Health has been a longstanding partner for hospitals and health systems to optimize the continuum of care. The first session will review the elements in developing a care transitions program in partnership with hospitals to improve outcomes and reduce hospitalization rates. In order to sell the clinical and financial benefits of care transitions for health systems, this session will provide metrics for assessing the effectiveness of the home health agency's packaged product as well as the costs and financial viability. The second session will review how critical self-management is to chronic care management, a practice key to reducing hospitalization. The session will introduce self-management concepts and approaches focusing on how such practice can support self-management in the home health population.

Care Transitions: Clinical and Financial Advantage to Home Health

March 19, 2015 • 1:00—2:30 pm CST

This session will review the preparation necessary to facilitate care transitions and to sell the advantage to potential partners: identify the elements in a package creating advantages to health systems; metrics for assessing the effectiveness of the packaged product to the health system; and the metrics for assessing financial viability.

Objectives:

- ◆ Identify the elements in a home health package creating financial and clinical advantages to health systems
- ◆ Identify the metrics for assessing the effectiveness of the home health agency's packaged product to the health system
- ◆ Identify the internal metrics for assessing costs and financial viability

Chronic Care Management in Home Health

March 26, 2015 • 1:00—2:30 pm CST

Self-management is critical to health and wellbeing for those with chronic conditions. Patients with chronic conditions comprise the largest percentage of the home health population. This session will address the role of home health in self-management to assist patients to manage their own conditions.

Objectives:

- ◆ Describe the evidence supporting self-management approaches for chronic conditions
- ◆ Analyze current practice in regard to the process of self-management
- ◆ Revise processes to promote a culture of self-management
